

Contents

Contributors	vii
Preface	viii
Foreword Lord Scarman	ix
1 The crowd in context	1
George Gaskell and Robert Benewick
Theories of the crowd	1
A review of the contributions	7
Discussion and implications	14
2 Violent disorders in twentieth-century Britain	19
Eric Dunning, Patrick Murphy, Tim Newburn and Ivan Waddington
Introduction	19
Objectives and methods	25
Violence in the community arena	28
Violence in the political arena	34
Violence in industry	46
Crowd disorder in the leisure/sport arena	66
Conclusion	71
3 Street life, ethnicity and social policy	76
John Edwards, Robin Oakley and Sean Carey
Introduction	76
Ethnographic findings	79
Policy images	105
The policy response to street life	109
The evaluation	109
4 Front-line supervision in the British police service	123
Michael Chatterton
Introduction	123
Patrolling and incident-attendance patterns	126
Disincentives to close supervision and monitoring	135
Station-based activities	141
Conclusions and implications	146

5	Flashpoints of public disorder	155
	David Waddington, Karen Jones and Chas Critcher
	Introduction	155
	A model of disorder	159
	Case study I: The 'Thatcher unwelcoming' demonstration	163
	Case study II: The NUM rallies in Sheffield, April 1984	171
	The second rally — 19 April	180
	Conclusion: diagnosing disorder	186
6	The peaceful crowd: crowd solidarity and the Pope's visit to Britain	200
	Robert Benewick and Robert Holton
	Crowd solidarity: The Pope in Britain	200
	Theoretical framework and research design	200
	The Wembley Mass reported	204
	The Wembley Mass experienced	206
	Analytical observations	208
	Conclusions	210
7	The crowd and the community: context, content and aftermath	212
	Geraint Parry, George Moyser and Margaret Wagstaffe
	Introduction	212
	The research design	214
	The socio-economic and physical context: patterns of deprivation	217
	Patterns of community	222
	The political significance of community	229
	Policing and the crowd	230
	The disturbances of 1981	237
	Participation and the crowd	241
	Forms of participation: conclusions and prospects	250
	Appendix: Sources for the study of recent crowd events	255
	John Stevenson
	Introduction	255
	Newspapers	257
	Television	259
	Video and audio sources	262
	The archive	266
	Index	267