

Contents

Foreword	1
1 Theories of Social Change	5
A programme: theories of social change	9
An illusion?	22
Three responses	25
2 Individual Action, Aggregation Effects and Social Change	29
The Weberian paradigm	32
The psychology of the social sciences	43
The notion of rationality	46
The notion of individualism	51
The aggregation of individual behaviour	56
3 The Laws Governing Change: the Nomological Bias	61
Conditional laws in general	62
Models and laws	67
The laws of mobilization	70
The laws of development and modernization	77
The anatomy of a theory of social change	80
4 Structures and Change: the Structuralist Bias	90
Structure as 'type'	90
Structure as 'essential characteristics'	92
'Structural' laws	93
Structure and ideologies	94
The coherence of structures in the face of change	101
Structural and non-structural elements	110

5	The Search for the Prime Mover: the Ontological Bias	121
	The part played by conflicts	126
	The part played by ideas and values (which is sometimes greater than we imagine)	134
	The part played by ideas and values (which is sometimes smaller than we imagine)	145
	Exogenous or endogenous change?	150
6	A Well-Tempered Determinism	154
	Open and closed processes	158
	Innovation and social change	166
	Chance and the part it plays	173
7	Giving Disorder its Due	180
	Postulates and observations	180
	Demarcations	190
	Variations on a theme of Simmel	197
	Rejecting disorder	207
	A note on the notion of validity	211
	Knowledge, interests and interpretations of social change	213
	Epilogue: the Snare of Realism	218
	Notes	228
	General Index	239