Contents

Acknowledgements 9

Introduction 11

The Chinese mass media and the Internet between state and society 14
The Chinese mass media and globalization 19
Technological determinism and democracy 25
Before democracy: the Internet-as-institution, cultural form, and competing norms 28
Journalism(s) and nationalism(s) – two optics on competing norms 36

1. Internet regulation and the youth/subaltern norm 41

Competition between the Party-state norm and the youth/subaltern norm 42
Internet cafés and the youth/subaltern norm 44
The Party-state as source and shaper of norms 47
The youth/subaltern norm and Internet cafés 52
The youth/subaltern norm and a real name registration system 55
The youth/subaltern norm and the Green Dam debacle 57
Competition between norms on China's Internet: the lessons drawn 61

2. In blogs they trust? 65

Mapping the Chinese blogosphere 70
The blogosphere: collectives of young individuals 75
Politically influential blogging 79
The blogosphere: pockets of activism and passive slacktivism 81
Trusting news breaks in the blogosphere, trusting news analysis in official media 83
The blogosphere and the Party-state 87

Bibliografische Informationen
http://d-nb.info/100731284X

digitalisiert durch DEUTSCHE NATIONAL BIBLIOTHEK

3. And the baton passes to … citizen journalism 93

Forms of government control over news production 99
The marriage of critical journalisms – offline, online and by citizens 105
The identities of investigative journalists 112
The relationship between traditional journalism and citizen journalism 118

4. Weapons of harmony and irony 127

The harmonious society and the Confucian revival 129
The state-led discourse on a harmonious Internet 133
A "self-disciplined" Internet industry and civil society 137
Self-censorship in society 144
The ironic counter-public 149
The 2006 mutilation of "The Promise" 152
The 2008 melamine-tainted milk scandal 153
The 2009 grass-mud horse versus the river crabs battle 153

5. Old propaganda becomes ideotainment 161

The public sphere, public opinion and the authoritarian state 164
The stirrings of a post-Mao attentive public in 1976 165
Propaganda after the Cultural Revolution and the Internet revolution 168
Ideotainment and propaganda theory 175
Is ideotainment effective in the age of new social media? 178
Can the effectiveness of ideotainment be measured? 180
The future of ideotainment 186

6. A nationalistic information sphere 191

The research field of Chinese nationalism 192
Popular nationalism – what is it? 196
Popular nationalism's perceived influence on foreign policy 198
Popular nationalism in the markets of media and ideology 203
The information sphere of Sino-Japanese relations 206
The information spheres of Tibet and Xinjiang 213
Nationalism and Chinese democratization 220

7. The Google mirage:
global business norms versus Internet sovereignty 227

States and companies in global information flows across territorial borders 230
Google inside China 2006–2010 232
The rhetoric and practise of information businesses 237
Domestic and multinational company norms 240
The discarded factor in the new global information order – outside pressure? 246
Google as a source and shaper of norms 251

8. Norms endgame and breakthrough 261

An uneasy social contract on control and freedom 265
State and society as mutually embedded 267
Erosion of the Party-state norm? 271
From one-directional to multi-directional surveillance 274
When activism goes offline 276
Before democracy 281
Breakthrough 282

Bibliography 287

Index 319