

Pop-Feminist Narratives

The Female Subject under Neoliberalism in North America, Britain, and Germany

EMILY SPIERS

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
List of Abbreviations	xi
Note about Translations	xiii
Introduction: Assembling the Narrative Threads	1
1. The Pop-Feminist Subject	25
2. Postmodern Literature in North America: Tracing Pop-Feminism's Narrative Arc	64
3. North American Pop-Feminism in the Post-Digital Era	116
4. British Pop-Feminism on the Literary Marketplace	135
5. German Pop-Feminism and Generational Narratives	184
Conclusion: Pop-Feminism and the Future	232
Bibliography	239
Index	253

List of Illustrations

1. The pop-aesthetic and stylized cover of Wir Alpha-Mädchen.
Copyright © 2008 by Hoffmann und Campe Verlag, Hamburg. 4
2. The front cover of April Fools' Day courtesy of Kathleen Hanna. 99
3. Inside page from April Fools' Day courtesy of Kathleen Hanna.
Note the playful mix of illustration, handwritten text, and type face typical of riot grrrl zines. 100
4. The front cover of GUNK #4 shows how Bikceem intersperses the autobiographical (the photograph depicts her as a child) with a political commentary on the lack of racial diversity in riot grrrl.
'Have you seen me?' implies the answer 'No'. Photograph courtesy of Ramdasha Bikceem. 104
5. Bikceem's polemical passage is on the left side of the page. Observe how she juxtaposes her text with the graphic illustration, the statistics on the beliefs of white Americans about race, the dictionary definitions of 'black' and 'white', which she has annotated to reveal racism at the level of language, and with the image of emaciated black men behind a white man in uniform. The advert for a comedy show underlines the bleak irony at play in Bikceem's work more generally.
Photograph courtesy of Ramdasha Bikceem. 105
6. The front cover of Sheila Heti's Brilliantine. Photograph courtesy of Sheila Heti. 107
7. The poem 'Lipstick' and the excerpt from Henry Miller's Under the Roofs of Paris are linked visually by the illustrations of women, which range from the hyper-feminine to the melancholic. Note how Heti's handwritten attribution appears to turn Miller himself into a faceless man in a bowler hat.
With kind permission from Sheila Heti. 108
8. This cut-and-paste calendar page by Kathleen Hanna demonstrates the thematic and aesthetic affinity between Hanna and Acker's work. Note especially the reference to pirates, that eminently Acker-esque theme. Photograph courtesy of Kathleen Hanna. 110
9. The front and back covers of GUNK #5, with kind permission from Ramdasha Bikceem. 112