

Contents

Introduction — 1

Belgian colonial rule and lagging elite formation — 41

The hesitant colonial power (1908–1940) — 41

Second World War, second colonization — 58

Developmental elites — 67

Elite periodicals between propaganda and empowerment — 84

Congolese voices — 84

The print media of the Catholic missionary orders — 94

Controlling reforms and controlling évolués — 102

Debating the évolué status (1944–1948) — 118

Law and colonial order: segregation by civility — 118

Controversies within the colonial public sphere — 125

Reform gridlock: expert commissions and the évolués problem — 134

Media interventions: propaganda for status reform — 141

Carte du mérite civique: elite status as emergency decree — 151

“Perfected Blacks” and malcontents (1945–1952) — 156

Cultural tropes and discourses of elite self-affirmation — 156

Education and character building — 164

Clothes (do not) make évolués — 167

Alcohol and bar culture — 171

The évolué family — 176

Domesticity and perfect homes — 183

Responsible consumption and saving money — 187

Associations and sociability between is and ought (1944–1953) — 193

The genesis and control of Congolese associations — 193

Cohesion and dissociation among missionary school graduates — 207

Engaged colonial officials and illustrious circles — 217

Fighting a losing battle: the évolué association in Stanleyville — 223

Illegitimate and disreputable sociability — 232

The lives of others: selecting the Congolese elite (1948–1956) — 242
A question of assimilation: the two-tier évolué status — 242
Civility, selection committees and delayed inter-imperial transfers — 256
Applications and selection procedures — 263
The colonial maturity test — 273
Social profiles and success rates — 281

A community of unequals (1952–1956) — 292
Belgian-Congolese visions and recognition denied — 292
Humiliated Congolese, imperfect Belgians — 299
Differences, not equality — 304
The School War and manifestos of self-determination — 308

Centrifugal forces of decolonization (1957–1960) — 319
Urban sites of political ethnicization — 319
Dissonant Congolese voices and évolués in crisis — 325
Stumbling into independence — 331
Rise of the old elite, breakup of the new state — 346

Conclusion — 352
Summary — 352
Global bourgeoisie and colonial Africa — 355

Acknowledgments — 369

List of Abbreviations — 373

Picture Credits — 375

Sources — 376

Bibliography — 382

Index — 416