

How can divergent and conflicting claims to truth be voiced in a dialogical manner that would facilitate a constructive approach towards diversity and difference without entailing a compulsion to define a consensus? With an eye toward this focal question, this volume provides an interdisciplinary contribution to contemporary debates on pluralism.