

PEASANTS, CITIZENS AND SOLDIERS

Studies in the Demographic History of Roman Italy
225 BC–AD 100

LUUK DE LIGT

0.

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of tables	page ix
List of maps	xi
Note on abbreviations	xiii
Preface	xv
Chapter 1 Evidence, theories and models in Roman population history 1
1.1 Introduction	1
1.2 Roman demography: low count versus high count	5
1.3 Traditional types of evidence: literary sources and rural survey data	10
1.4 New approaches	11
1.4.1 Evidence for land clearance	13
1.4.2 Evidence for the size of Italian towns	16
1.4.3 Osteological evidence	17
1.4.4 Estimates of carrying capacity	20
1.4.5 Comparative evidence	25
1.4.6 Climate change	27
1.4.7 Commercial grain imports	30
1.4.8 Imperial expansion and population growth	31
1.5 Old and new approaches to Roman demography: strengths and limitations	34
Chapter 2 Polybius' manpower figures and the size of the Italian population on the eve of the Hannibalic War 40
2.1 Introduction	40
2.1.1 Low count	40
2.1.2 High count	44
2.1.3 Other interpretations	47
2.2 Some weaknesses of existing interpretations	47
2.2.1 Towards a new interpretation: the background to the tally of 225 BC	52
2.2.2 Age groups in the armies of the Republic	55
2.2.3 Some further implications	63

2.4	The population of Italy in 225 BC	71
2.5	The Polybian manpower figures and Roman mobilization rates	72
2.6	Conclusions	77
Chapter 3	Census procedures and the meaning of the republican and early-imperial census figures	79
3.1	Introduction	79
3.1.1	A very short account of the republican census	80
3.1.2	The central problem: census procedures and registration rates	81
3.2	The target population of the republican censuses: iuniores and seniores	82
3.2.1	Citizens sui iuris and citizens alieni iuris	83
3.2.2	Cives optimo iure and cives sine suffragio	87
3.2.3	Legionaries serving outside Italy	95
3.2.4	Assidui and proletarii	98
3.3	Centralized and decentralized census procedures before the Social War	106
3.4	The census figure for 86/85 BC	112
3.5	Some other pieces of evidence	116
3.6	Republican census procedures: some provisional conclusions	120
3.7	A change in registration or reporting practices under Augustus?	120
3.7.1	Interpreting the Augustan census figures: philological and technical arguments	121
3.7.2	Comparative perspectives on the Augustan census figures	128
3.8	Conclusions	134
Chapter 4	Peasants, citizens and soldiers, 201 BC–28 BC	135
4.1	Introduction	135
4.2	Developments between 201 BC and 163 BC: four questions	137
4.2.1	The impact of the Hannibalic War and the census figure for 203 BC	138
4.2.2	Demographic recovery after the Second Punic War	142
4.2.3	The rationale behind virginal distributions and colonization	150
4.2.4	The low count and the spread of agricultural slavery	154
4.3	Developments between 163 BC and 133 BC: the background to the Gracchan land reforms	157
4.3.1	The Gracchan land reforms in the literary tradition	158
4.3.2	Theories of demographic decline: poverty and its consequences	159
4.3.3	More slaves = fewer rural citizens?	162
4.3.4	Recruitment and losses on the battlefield	165
4.3.5	An alternative low-count reconstruction	167

4.3.6	Competing low-count readings of the census figures for the period 163 BC–124 BC	171
4.3.7	The high count and the Gracchan land reforms	177
4.3.8	Survey archaeology and the Gracchan ‘crisis’	179
4.4	Developments between 133 BC and 28 BC	182
4.4.1	Marius and the proletarianization of the legions	183
4.4.2	Emigration from Italy	184
4.4.3	Emigration, urbanization and the decline of the free population	187
4.5	Conclusions	191
Chapter 5	The Augustan census figures and Italy’s urban network	193
5.1	Introduction	193
5.1.1	The geographical distribution of the population	194
5.1.2	Italy’s urban network at the time of Augustus	196
5.1.3	Definitional problems	199
5.1.4	Some methodological considerations	202
5.2	The urban network of Cisalpine Gaul in 28 BC	205
5.2.1	Some ingredients for a more detailed analysis	210
5.2.2	Expected urbanization rates	211
5.2.3	Expected urban population densities	213
5.2.4	A low-count model for Cisalpine Gaul	224
5.2.5	A high-count model for Cisalpine Gaul?	227
5.3	The population of central and southern Italy	228
5.3.1	Expected urbanization rates in central and southern Italy	230
5.3.2	Expected urban population densities in central and southern Italy	233
5.4	The urban network of central and southern Italy in 28 BC: a brief outline	235
5.4.1	Some low-count models for central and southern Italy	238
5.4.2	Some high-count models for central and southern Italy	241
5.5	Some general conclusions	242
Chapter 6	Survey archaeology and demographic developments in the Italian countryside	247
6.1	Introduction	247
6.2	Methodological problems	249
6.3	Diachronic patterns and their interpretation	254
6.4	Trends in site numbers, 300 BC–AD 100	257
6.5	Rural survey data and demographic models	265
6.6	Site densities in the suburbium : towards a low-count explanation	271
6.7	Land and labour in central-western Italy, 200 BC–AD 100	279
6.8	Conclusions	283

Epilogue	284
Appendices
I Cities and towns in early-imperial Cisalpina	289
II Cities and towns in central and south Italy	304
III Population figures for largest northern cities, AD 1600	337
IV Some ingredients for a revised low-count model	340
Bibliography	345
Index	382