

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1

Part One The Genesis of the "Critique of Aesthetic Judgment"

1. Kant and the Pursuit of Aufklärung 17
2. Kant's Return to Aesthetics: Transcendental Arguments and the "Critique of Taste" 45
3. Validity and Actuality: Toward Kant's Phenomenology of Subjective Consciousness 64
4. The Transcendental Grounding of Taste: Purpose and Pleasure 89
5. The Beautiful and the Pleasant: Kant's Transcendental Deduction of Taste 106
6. Kant's Philosophy of Art in the Year 1788 124

Part Two The Genesis of the "Critique of Teleological Judgment"

7. The Cognitive Turn: The Discovery of Reflective Judgment 151
8. The Contextual Origins of Kant's Critique of Contemporary Science 178
9. Kant against Eighteenth-Century Hylozoism 189
10. The Problem of Organic Form in the "Critique of Teleological Judgment" 214
11. The Pantheism Controversy and the Third Critique 228

12. Kant's Attack on Spinoza in the "Dialectic of Teleological Judgment" 248

Part Three The Final Form of the Critique of Judgment

13. The Ethical Turn in Kant's Critique of Judgment 263
14. The Sublime, the Symbolic, and Man's "Supersensible
Destination" 269
15. Aesthetics As the Key to Anthropology: Lebensgefühl
and Geistesgefühl 292
16. The Unity of Man: Man As an "End-in-Himself" 306
17. The Unity of Mankind: The Highest Good, History, and Religion 323

Conclusion: The Ultimate Meaning of the Third
Critique 342

Notes 347

Bibliography 427

Index 455