Argenti is senior lecturer in anthropology at Brunel University. Since the 1990s he has worked in Cameroon on questions regarding youth, childhood, power, and collective memory. He is the author of The Invention of the Slave Trade: Violence and Belated Histories in the Cameroon Grassfields (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007) and the co-editor of three collections on youth in Africa, on slavery, and on memories of political violence. He has recently started a new research project on collective memories of political violence in the Aegean island of Chios.

Robert M. Baum (Ph.D., Yale University) is an associate professor of Religious Studies at the University of Missouri. He is the author of numerous articles on Islam and Christianity, African religions, Indigenous religions, and the comparative study of protest movements. His best known work is Saints of the Slave Trade: God, Religion, and Society in Precolonial Senegambia (New York: Oxford University Press, 2006). He received the American Academy of Religion's Award for the best book in the history of religions. He is currently completing a book on the history of Black prophetic movements and is working on a continent-wide history of African religions.

James R. Brennan is Associate Professor of African History at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and a research associate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, where he previously taught. His work focuses on urbanization, political thought, media, and opposition politics in eastern Africa and the Indian Ocean. He is author of numerous articles and books, Ambers, as well as Tapestry-making Nation and Race in Urban Tanzania (Athens: Ohio University Press, 2017). He is currently researching a political biography of Oscar Kambona, who was the last president of Tanzania's first president, Julius Nyerere.
