

Contents

Introductory note — 1

1 The right to religious freedom in the liberal era: from tolerance to freedom — 3

- 1.1 Religious freedom and state religion: separatist ideals and jurisdictionalist lapses — 3
- 1.2 Rome capital of Italy: an inevitable conflict between state and church — 8
- 1.3 The great accommodation: the Law of Guarantees — 9
- 1.4 The end of a liberal balancing act: religious affairs at the start of the 1900's — 13

2 The Conciliazione: fascism and its ecclesiastical policy — 18

- 2.1 Towards the Conciliation — 18
- 2.2 The Lateran Pacts of February 11, 1929 — 20
- 2.3 The implementation of the Pacts: towards a (confessional) religious freedom? — 25
- 2.4 A clash of interpretations and signs of rupture — 30

3 The right to religious freedom in the republican Constitution — 33

- 3.1 A new scenario: contemporaneity — 33
- 3.2 The new constitutional order and the Lateran Pacts — 34
- 3.3 The Constitution: Article 7 — 37
- 3.4 Article 8 — 40
- 3.5 Articles 19 and 20 — 42

4 The right to religious freedom: from text to action — 44

- 4.1 Premise — 44
- 4.2 First half: the impossible confessionalism and the role of the Constitutional Court — 44
- 4.3 The 1970s: an era of reforms — 48

5 The Villa Madama Accords of 1984: a new right to religious freedom for the Catholic Church — 55

- 5.1 The last concordat? — 55
- 5.2 Contents — 57
- 5.3 The new Accords and a new context for religious freedom — 61

6	Beyond the Catholic Church: the era of pluralism and agreements — 66
6.1	The birth of a star: the intesa or bilaterality for ‘infidels’ — 66
6.2	The first agreements: the warping of an institution — 68
6.3	A clogged system — 71
6.4	A change of scene: new problems with religious freedom — 75
6.5	The ripples of globalisation in Italy — 79
6.6	The right to religious freedom: political fears and technocratic expedients — 85
7	The Italian model faces change: policy shortcomings — 88
7.1	Living without laws: a (less than) golden mean — 88
7.2	The pyramid of religions — 95
7.3	The case of Islam — 100
7.4	Filling the institutional gaps? The role of Regions, municipalities and universities — 113
7.5	Political interpretations: some examples of legislative practice — 127
8	Constitutional judges and the pyramid of religions: the difficulty of procedure without politics — 140
8.1	Constitutional jurisprudence and bilateral legislation: inertia or political caution? — 140
8.2	The principle of secularity and the sources of law on religious freedom — 142
8.3	The principle of secularity and its applications: the citadel of bilateral law — 145
8.4	The example of criminal law — 149
9	The right to religious freedom of a nation-state: the ‘Catholic invariant’ in a changing society — 152
9.1	The Catholic paradigm: institutionalism, bilaterality and political influence — 152
9.2	Political logic and accommodation — 158
9.3	Catholic church and the sources of law for religious freedom — 162
9.4	A contemporary right to religious freedom — 165
9.5	The constitutional principle of secularity: Italy’s path to pluralism — 167
9.6	Constitutional secularity and its opposing narratives — 169
9.7	Constitutional secularity and ‘healthy secularity’: from homonymy to osmosis? — 172
9.8	Secularity and the right to religious freedom: the role of the Catholic Church — 177

Epilogue

The Italian right to religious freedom, specificity, and secularisation in the Euro-Mediterranean area — 182

Bibliography — 187

Index — 194