

"This trenchantly argued exploration of the ways in which states use ethnicity to select among potential immigrants elucidates a basic tension between the universalist commitments of liberal democratic nation-states and the inescapable particularity of their histories, cultures, and populations."

University of California at Los Angeles, author of Ethnicity without Groups

"This well-written book makes a major contribution to scholarship about immigration and liberal democracy. Joppke succeeds in doing two things outstandingly well. First, he provides a cogent theoretical argument about the nature of ethnic migration and how it has changed over time, and the constraints now confronting any efforts to shift government policy towards greater selectivity, even though such illiberal pressures endure and are often created by liberal governments. Second, he provides a detailed and informed empirical account, rooted in comparative historical analysis, of the three types of ethnic migration."

Oxford University, author of *Making Americans:
Immigration, Race, and the Origins of the Diverse Democracy*

PPN: 11823725X

Titel: Selecting by origin : ethnic migration in the liberal state / Christian Joppke. - Cambridge, Mass. [u.a.] : Harvard Univ. Press, 2005

ISBN: 0-674-01559-2

Bibliographischer Datensatz im SWB-Verbund