

Contents

List of figures	page ix
Acknowledgements	xi

1	Introduction: the powers of the state	1
	I. The social history of the state	1
	II. Power, things and the coming of the technostate	27

Part I The state of things: connecting

2	"Man is made of the Post Office": making the social technical	53
	I. The postal network becomes a system	56
	II. Writing and postal technologies	75
3	Postal economy and society: making the technical social	100
	I. Economising the state and society	102
	II. Postal society: learning the state	120
4	Filing the Raj: political technologies of the imperial state	144
	I. Making centres	145
	II. "The faculty of arrangement"	161

Part II The state of men: governing

5	The work of the state	187
	I. The common knowledge of the state	193
	II. The civil service statesman	216
6	The grammars of governance: pedagogies of the powerful	229
	I. Lineages of the liberal governor	230
	II. Classics and the remaking of liberal education	242

7	“The fathers govern the nation”: the public school and the Oxbridge college	263
	I. Making mastery	264
	II. The domus	286
	Postscript: another kind of state house	303
8	Conclusion: legacies of the liberal Leviathan	308
	Select bibliography	338
	Index	364