

Contents

Preface to the English edition	ix
Acknowledgments	xx
Preliminary remarks	xxii
Prologue – Interpellation	1
In which the author comes to understand that it is sometimes dangerous to wait for a bus in the projects on New Year's Eve.
Introduction – Inquiry	13
How the present research was authorized and then forbidden, and why this censorship is revelatory of petty exceptions in a democracy.
1 – Situation	34
How an imagination of war came to be established in the relations between the police and the projects, and how it justified specific types of operation.
2 – Ordinary	59
How the daily work of police officers is far removed from the image they had of it when they joined the force, and how they maintain the illusion of it.

3 – Interactions	85
How stops and searches serve purposes other than those they are supposed to serve, and why they are more effective in perpetuating a social order than in maintaining public order.
4 – Violence	113
How a criminal court can offer valuable lessons on excessive use of force by the police, and why observation invites rethinking of the question of violence beyond brutality.
5 – Discrimination	144
How social scientists challenge the existence of discriminatory practices that the population is convinced prevail, and why racism must be considered beyond individual behavior.
6 – Politics	174
How the exhibition of certain signs may be surprising in a public institution, and how authoritarian national policies can converge with local police discretion.
7 – Morality	193
How police officers disappointed by the justice of the courts began to practice street justice, and how tensions in professional ethics are resolved.
Conclusion – Democracy	215
How the French police preferred the model of the cop in the United States to the style of the British bobby, and why ethnography matters for democracy.
Epilogue – Time	224
In which the author looks back to a not-so-distant past, observes that the more things change the more they do not stay the same, and expresses concerns about the future.
Notes	230
Bibliography	266
Index	275