- 7 Ornament of gold foil for sewing on costume, in the form of a lion mask with appendage. Weight 17 g. Richly furnished double grave found in 1820. 350-400 AD, Årslev, Vindinge District, Svendborg County. NM C 8564. Cf. 166, 167.
- 8 Silver cup with frieze in gold foil. H. 13.1 cm. Diam. 10.5 cm. Man's grave (Grave J). 3rd cent. AD, Nordrup, Nordrup Parish, Ringsted District, Sorø County. NM C 4829.
- 9 Detail of the above.
- 10 Detail of 8 with various stamped groups between the animals.
- 11 Frieze in gilded silver foil on one of two almost identical silver cups from a man's grave, found in 1828. 3rd cent. AD, Himlingøje Parish, Bjeverskov District, Præstø County. NM MCMXXXVI.

- 12 As preceding illustration, detail of frieze.
- 13 Detail of frieze on the same cup as 11. Photo Johs. Jensen.
- 14 The Golden Horns from Gallehus, Tønder County. Hoard finds, 1639 and 1734. The Golden Horns were found at an interval of 95 years in the same field. The long Golden Horn was discovered by the girl Kirsten Svendsdatter from Østerby in 1639 when she happened to kick it with her foot where it projected from the surface of the field. In time the Golden Horn ended up with King Christian IV, who gave it to his eldest son. By then it had been furnished with a screw plug at the narrow end. The antiquarian Ole Worm was able to see and draw the horn, and as early as 1641 he published a description of the Golden Horn in Latin with a copperplate print of the horn executed after a drawing he had approved. Worm writes that the horn was 'double' and consisted of an undecorated horn of a silver and gold alloy and eleven wide rings of gold which were slipped over and decorated with punched ornaments and brazed relief figures. The chord length of the horn is 71.3 cm and the diameter of the opening is 29.5 cm.
The short horn was found in the spring of 1734 just a few steps from the find-spot for the long horn by the smallholder Jerk Larsen, who was digging for clay. It was taken to Count Schack, who gave it to King Christian VI in Flensburg a few weeks later. The horn was described and drawn by the archivist J.R. Paulli, who published his monograph in German the same year. It appeared in Danish in 1736. Just below the opening the short horn had a runic inscription which translates as 'I, Lægæst, son of Holt [or descendent of Holt] made the horn'.
The horns had been deposited in the field early in the fifth century. But in 1802 they were stolen from the Royal Cabinet of Curiosities and melted down by the thief. The reconstructions of the horns are made of gilded silver on the basis of Worm's and Paulli's illustrations and were a gift to the Museum of Nordic Antiquities (now the National Museum of Denmark) from King Frederik VII.
- 15 Detail of the short Golden Horn, third panel from the top: Two acrobats with swords.
- 16 Detail of the long Golden Horn, third panel from top: Two acrobats, a snake and a centaur.
- 17 Detail of the short Golden Horn, fifth panel (bottom one): Dancing man. Left, two large fishes and stars.

- 18 Detail of the short Golden Horn, top panel: Dancing man with horn, scythe(?) in one hand and staff in the other. Left, a dog. Fabulous animal and stars below and left.
- 19 Detail of the long Golden Horn, fifth panel. Two naked men with a game board and a dog(?) seated below. Inside the right-hand man a large snake.
- 20 Detail of the short Golden Horn, third panel. Snake with coiled body attacking a stylized human figure. Right, a centaur; left, a stag. Stars below.
- 21 Detail of the short Golden Horn, top panel: Weapon dancer surrounded by stamped star figures, fish and animal figure. A 12-beamed sun or star shines above his head; on his chest and at the bottom of the costume he has an 8-pointed star. Right, probably a weapon dancer. The belly part of the figures functions as a lug for fastening a cord.
- 22 Detail of the long Golden Horn, second panel. Dancing or naked man carrying two turned-down spearheads. Left, two stamped snake figures; right, two stamped fabulous animals and an archer.
- 23 Detail of the long Golden Horn, top panel. Three seated, naked figures 'throwing a ball'. The man in the middle has a greatly exaggerated chin; cf. 55, the wooden figure from Rude Eskilstrup. Left, a snake. Below them, a naked man 'leaping' with arms and legs raised. Left, a snake with a coiled body; right, a seated man viewed in profile in a ball-throwing or worshipping position. Between the two figure groups are stamped snake figures and 'flowers' with four petals.
- 24 Detail of the same frieze as the preceding. A dancing man, a bird pecking at a large fish, a man 'leaping' between two snakes with coiled bodies. Beneath them two naked, seated men with raised arms (worshipping?) each in front of a snake in agitated motion.
- 25 Detail of the long Golden Horn, second panel: Woman holding up a large horn. The figure has an exaggeratedly long face (mask?), long hair and a long costume. Behind her, two stamped human figures holding hands, whose legs end in bands that interlace, and a horse. In front of her a large stamped snake figure.
- 26 Two guldgubber, figures of cut gold foil. 6th cent. Probably found in 1744 or 1747 on the farm Kongsvik, Tjeldsund, Lødingen Parish, Nordland, Norway. (Pontoppidan's find). NM 5313.

- 27 Guldgubbe, figure of cut gold foil from Bornholm, probably Sorte Muld. 6th cent. NM 121(8684). (See v. Melle's finds, no. 18). Jacob von Melle (1659-1743) was a German churchman and learned polymath who lived most of his life in his native Lübeck. In connection with his historical studies he founded a cabinet of curiosities which also included a coin collection. In 1725 he published in Latin 'A small study of the gold images that are ploughed up from the fields on Bornholm, an island in the Baltic Sea'. There he described the twenty best items in his collection of guldgubber, which he is said to have been sent by a friend on Bornholm. The find-spots for the guldgubber are not clearly described, but Margrethe Watt considers it likely that they come from the settlement site Sorte Muld.

- 28 Guldgubbe, figure of cut gold foil. Unknown find-spot, Denmark, 6th cent. NM.

- 29 Guldgubbe 'family' of cut gold foil (engraved). 6th cent. NM 121(8684). (See v. Melle's finds, nos. 12 and 19).
