

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction: The Cautious Inquirer	1
The humanistic impulse	3
Sociology as worldview	3
Topics	4
Coda	8
PART I Discovering Society	11
1 Thinking about Society	13
Philosophical foundations	14
Toward a science of society	17
The sources of modern sociological perspective	19
The crystallization of sociology	23
2 A Biography of Sociological Perspective	31
Conclusion	51
3 The Human Dimensions of Sociological Inquiry	57
Science and values	67
The social organization of science	69
Conclusion	73
PART II Society, the Self, and Social Relationships	77
4 Imagining Society	79
Dialectical sociology	80
General systems sociology	83
Ecological/evolutionary sociology	86
The ecological program	89

Commonalities and complementarities	91
Power, ecology, and evolution	93
Conclusion	94
5 The Social Structure of the Self	99
The self as a social structure	99
The self as a program	102
The self in motion	104
The self, social isolation, and drastic change	106
Self-actualization	108
Ecology, evolution, and the self	112
Conclusion	113
6 The Sociology of Love	117
Sociological perspectives on love	124
Beyond the ideology of romantic love	126
The humanistic conception of love	128
Love and sociocultural evolution	131
An evolutionary sociology of love	133
Love and human liberation	136
The future of intimate relationships	137
Conclusion	139
 PART III Knowledge and Belief	 147
 7 The Social Construction of Religion	 149
Types of societies and types of religions	149
The functions of religion	150
The transcendental religions	153
Politics and religion	154
Magicians, wonderworkers, and messiahs	155
Conclusion	156
8 The Social Construction of Mathematics	161
Sociological talk about mathematics	161
The sociology of mathematics	162
Number facts	164
Pure mathematics	165
Mathematics as worldview	166
Conflict and mathematics	167
Pure versus applied: the limits of autonomy	168
Conclusion	169

PART IV Global Sociology	175
9 The Ecumene	177
The Ecumene	179
The third-culture of science	183
The search for world order	186
The sociology of the world	189
Conclusion	193
Bibliographical Epilogue	197
Index	201