

THE FIRST ANNUAL HUMAN RIGHTS REPORT documents a dramatic, but little-noticed, decline in the number of wars, genocides and human rights abuses over the past decade. It argues that the single most-compelling explanation for these changes is found in the unprecedented upsurge of international activism, spearheaded by the UN, that took place in the wake of the Cold War.