

'A clear and concise introduction to the issues faced when preparing, conducting and presenting anthropological research. For students, this book might serve as a pre-emptive strike against many common problems, as well as a companion to the joys of conducting good research.'

Edward Simpson, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, UK

'This volume by experienced anthropologists offers a wealth of sound, succinct advice on how to plan and conduct ethnographic fieldwork, how to organize and analyze information, and how to write up coherently. Aspiring anthropologists should ignore this book at their peril.'

Olaf H. Smedal, University of Bergen, Norway

Doing Anthropological Research provides a practical toolkit for carrying out research. It works through the research process chapter by chapter, from the planning and proposal stage to methodologies, secondary research, ethnographic fieldwork, ethical concerns and writing strategies. Case study examples are provided throughout to illustrate the particular issues and dilemmas that may be encountered. This handy guide will be invaluable to upper-level undergraduate and postgraduate students who are studying or intending to use anthropological methods in their research.

Natalie Konopinski received her Ph.D. in Social Anthropology from the University of Edinburgh, UK, and has taught anthropological research methods to undergraduate and postgraduate students. She is currently a visiting scholar at George Mason University, USA.
