

Contents

1	Introduction: Islam, Modernity, Modernities, and the “Provincialization” of Europe	1
1.1	Why This Book? Autobiographical Notes and Theoretical Positioning	3
1.2	Hijra wa jawazat : Michel Foucault and Hafiz al-Asad	8
1.3	The Organization of the Book and the Course of the Argumentation	12
	References.	15
2	Islam and Modernity: A Sketch of the Academic Engagement with the Middle East and Islam.	19
2.1	Islam and the Middle East in the Understanding of Modernization Theory	20
2.2	Edward Said’s Criticism of Orientalism	24
2.3	Neo-Orientalists and Renewers in Islamic Studies	27
2.4	Research on Modern Islamic Piety Movements.	30
2.5	Conclusions: The State of Research.	32
	References.	35
3	Islam and the Diversity of Modernity: Multiple, Successive, and Entangled Modernities	39
3.1	Shmuel Eisenstadt: The Theory of Multiple Modernities	40
3.2	Peter Wagner: The Theory of Successive Modernities	44
3.3	Postcolonialism: The Theory of Entangled Modernities	49
3.4	Ignaz Goldziher: Orientalist and Jewish Reformer	52
3.5	Muhammad Abduh: Egyptian Grand Mufti and Islamic Reformer	55

3.6	Conclusions: Restricted Liberalisms and Colonial Entanglements	59
	References.	61
4	Islam and the Unity of Modernity: Modernization as an “Empty Progression”	67
4.1	Emile Durkheim: Anomie, Fait Social and Organic Solidarity	69
4.2	Niklas Luhmann: World Society and Functional Differentiation	74
4.3	Islam and Functional Differentiation: State, Economy and Science in Islamic Contexts	79
4.4	Modernity as a Cultural Project and as a Structural Process of “Empty Progression”	86
4.5	Conclusions: Unity and Difference of Modernity	89
	References.	90
5	Islam and the Emergence of Modernity: World Society as an Emergent Social Reality	95
5.1	Functional Differentiation as an Emerging Structure of Modernity	98
5.2	Emergence and Functional Differentiation in Islamic History I: Faith and Science in Islamic Thought	105
5.3	Emergence and Functional Differentiation in Islamic History II: Towards the Autonomy of Politics in the Islamic World.	109
5.4	Conclusions: Max Weber and Islam	118
	References.	122
6	Islam and the Modern Subject: Contingency, Identity, and Subject Cultures	127
6.1	Social Contingency and Modern Uncertainties	130
6.2	The Modern Subject: The Simultaneity of Autonomy and Submission	138
6.3	Typology of Modern Subject Cultures and Islamic Modernities	143
6.4	Conclusion: Islamic History in the Context of a “World Time”	154
	References.	156

7	Islam and the Modern “World Culture”: Organizations, Institutions, and Social Actors	161
7.1	World Society as World Culture: Theoretical Premises and Delimitations of the Stanford School	164
7.2	Isomorphic Forms of World Culture: Formal Organizations and Social Actors	169
7.3	Two Case Studies: Kemalist Turkey and the Islamic Republic of Iran	175
7.3.1	The Secularism of the Republic of Turkey	176
7.3.2	The Rule of the Religious Scholars in the Islamic Republic of Iran	183
7.4	Conclusions: Diffusions and Decouplings as “Circulative Adaptation”	189
	References	191
8	Conclusion: World Society and the Islamic Discourse of Modernity	197
8.1	Summary: Islam in Global Modernity	198
8.2	World Society as a Point of Comparison and Global History	204
8.3	The Islamic Discourse of Modernity: Authenticity and Hegemony	207
	References	214