

Contents

List of Figures and Tables	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction	1
1. Understanding Human Security	4
Human security and international relations	4
Defining human security	5
Security and the study of international relations	7
Global communication and human security	16
Global communication and world order	18
Communication, human security and the public sphere	21
2. Towards a Global Communications Industry	24
Global communication – a historical overview	24
States and mass communications	27
The political economy of global communication – understanding the transformation of media markets	29
Technology, ideology and social power in the political economy of communication	31
Neoliberal political economy	39
The impact of neoliberal political economy – globalising tendencies	40
A qualitative change in global communication?	46
Global communications? The changing structure of the communications industries	47
Global communication and the changing structure of ownership and control – from synergy to oligopoly	48
Globalisation and the information society – an introduction	51
Conclusions: problems for human security	52
3. Human Security and Global Communication –     Into the Twenty-First Century	53
Knowledge, power and rationality	53
Communication needs and human security	59
Developments in the political economy of education	65
Global communication, information and human security	71
Neoliberal political economy – idealised brutality	72

Conclusions: obstacles to human security – the limits of neoliberal analysis	80
4. Public Sphere, Private Power – The Limits to Autonomy and Human Security	83
Developments in the public sphere?	83
A neoliberal Utopia? The information society considered	86
Conclusions: The Good Society?	94
5. Building the Perfect Beast: The Information Society Revealed	96
Democracy against capitalism? The neutered state	108
Human security, autonomy and the information society	113
Conclusion: human security and the public sphere in an age of information	123
6. Global Communication, Human Security and the Challenge to the Public Sphere	125
Globalisation and human security	125
Globalisation from above	126
Globalisation from below	131
The global public sphere and human security	133
Notes
Bibliography	136
Index	145
	160

List of Figures and Tables

Figures

2.1 A model of global political economy	29
2.2 The growing gap between rich and poor countries	43

Tables

2.1 Top ten global telecommunications corporations	26
3.1 Comparative annual global expenditure in US$ billions	68
3.2 Global distribution of the world's ultra-rich, 1997	73