

Contents

List of contributors	xiv
Foreword Victor Navasky	xix
Introduction: when trauma shapes the news Barbie Zelizer and Stuart Allan	1
PART I
The trauma of September 11	33
1 September 11 in the mind of American journalism Jay Rosen	35
2 What's unusual about covering politics as usual Michael Schudson	44
3 Photography, journalism, and trauma Barbie Zelizer	55
4 Mediating catastrophe: September 11 and the crisis of the other Roger Silverstone	75
PART II
News and its contexts	83
5 American journalism on, before, and after September 11 James W. Carey	85

6	September 11 and the structural limitations of US journalism Robert W. McChesney	104
7	“Our duty to history”: newsmagazines and the national voice Carolyn Kitch	113
8	Covering Muslims: journalism as cultural practice Karim H. Karim	131
9	“Why do they hate us?”: seeking answers in the pan-Arab news coverage of 9/11 Noha Mellor	147

PART III
The changing boundaries of journalism		167

10	Reweaving the Internet: online news of September 11 Stuart Allan	169
11	Converging into irrelevance?: supermarket tabloids in the post-9/11 world S. Elizabeth Bird	191
12	Media fundamentalism: the immediate response of the UK national press to terrorism—from 9/11 to 7/7 Michael Bromley and Stephen Cushion	212
13	Television agora and agoraphobia post-September 11 Simon Cottle	232
14	“Our ground zeros”: diaspora, media, and memory Marie Gillespie	252

PART IV
Reporting trauma tomorrow		271

15	Journalism, risk, and patriotism Silvio Waisbord	273
16	Trauma talk: reconfiguring the inside and outside Annabelle Sreberny	292

17 Journalism and political crises in the global network society Ingrid Volkmer	308
18 Reporting under fire: the physical safety and emotional welfare of journalists Howard Tumber	319
Afterword Phillip Knightley	335
Index	337