The Russians in Israel

A New Ethnic Group in a Tribal Society

Majid Ibrahim Al-Haj

Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group
LONDON AND NEW YORK

Contents

List of figures ix
List of tables xi
Acknowledgments xiii

Introduction 1
Immigration, diversity, and conflict 1
This monograph 2
Methodology 4
The current study 4
The immigrants' survey 4
Survey of the general population 5
Focus groups 5
Comparison with the earlier study 6

1 Theoretical framework 9
Immigration and reconstruction of ethnic identity 10
Multiculturalism 16
Multicultural policies toward indigenous groups, national minorities, and immigrants 18
The retreat of multiculturalism 21
'Multiculturalism without culture' and 'individual multiculturalism' 24
Tribalism and tribal identities 25

2 Israel as a deeply divided society: multiculturalism versus tribalism 29
The Jewish-Arab divide 29
Background 30
Policy toward the Palestinian Arabs in Israel 30
Immigration and ethnic divide among the Jewish population in Israel 37
Ethnicity as a sociocultural rift 38

The modernization-establishment approach 38
The melting-pot ideology 40
Counterapproaches to ethnic relations 43
Ethnicity and the religious-nonreligious divide 46
Religious-nonreligious relations 48
The Arab Spring and the social rift in Israel 52
Multiculturalism versus tribal identities in Israeli society 54
Militaristic culture 55
A majority with a 'minority phobia' 56
A minority with a 'sense of majority' 60
Ideology and orientation of religious groups 63
Anti-multicultural policy 63
The rise of 'tribalism' 64

3 Jewish immigration to Palestine-Israel and the waves of immigration from Russia and the former Soviet Union: a background 70
A background of Jews in Russia and the FSU 71
Official policy toward Jews in the Soviet Union 71
Emigration by Russian/Soviet/FSU Jews 74
The first waves to Palestine 74
Immigration after the establishment of Israel 76
Immigration and the proportion of Jews in Israel as compared to the world 77
Immigration and ethnic divisions 80
Waves of immigrants from the Soviet Union 81
The 1970s wave 81
Ethiopia: a new reservoir of immigrants 82
Aspirations for aliya from the West 84
The 1990s wave 86
Main trends 87
Differences between the 1970s and the 1990s waves 88

4 The politics of identity among immigrants and their location within the ethnic map of Israel 90
Theoretical framework 90
Definition of ethnic group 90
Ethnicity in Israel 95
The position of Soviet immigrants within the ethnic map in Israel 98
Identity patterns among Soviet immigrants 101
Main approaches regarding ethnic formation among Russian immigrants 102

Objective elements: history and collective memory of Russian immigrants 105
Behavioral elements of immigrants in Israel 106
Subjective factors: ethnic consciousness and sense of solidarity 111
Self-identification 116
Other identification 120

5 Political behavior and the activation of ethnic boundaries 124
Theoretical framework 124
Background: ethnic politics in Israel 128
The voting behavior of Russian immigrants 129
Findings of the 1999 and 2010 surveys 137
Factors affecting voting behavior 139

6 Non-Jewish immigrants and the dilemma of collective identity and citizenship in a Jewish state 148
Background 148
Problems posed to Israeli society by non-Jewish immigrants 150
Response of veteran Israelis 155
Attempts to convert non-Jewish immigrants 156
Similarities and differences between Jewish and non-Jewish immigrants 161

7 Immigrants, conflict, and the social map in Israel 167
Theoretical framework 167
The impact of immigrants on the character of Israeli society 169
Russian immigrants and the social map in Israel 170
Immigrants' attitudes toward the indigenous Palestinian-Arab population and the Israel-Arab conflict 175

8 Concluding remarks 188

References 203
Index 233