

A VISIONARY HISTORY OF INDIGENOUS ACTIVISM SUPPRESSED AS TERRORISM

New Indigenous movements are gaining traction in North America: the Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Idle No More movements in Canada, and the Native Lives Matter and Dakota Access Pipeline opposition (NoDAPL) movements in the United States. Owing to the extraordinary visibility of contemporary activism, Indigenous people have been again cast as terrorists—a designation that justifies severe measures of policing, exploitation, and violence. Red Scare investigates the intersectional scope of the four movements and the broader context of the treatment of Indigenous social justice movements as threats to neoliberal and imperialist social orders.

“Essential reading for those wanting to understand how Indianness continues to be reproduced for the U.S. empire. Red Scare trenchantly confronts some of the most pressing issues facing Indigenous peoples in North America.” JODI BYRD, author of The Transit of Empire

“A truly excellent book that introduces Indigenous social justice and treaty rights movements and situates them in relation to gender and sexual violences, contemporary capitalist crisis, and environmental justice.” ALYOSHA GOLDSTEIN, author of Poverty in Common

“This powerful work provides Indigenous peoples with the intellectual tools to see past our difference.” BRENDA MACDOUGALL, author of One of the Family

“A vision of a truly ecologically just, gender emancipatory, free world for all.” GLEN COULTHARD, author of Red Skin, White Masks
